Project Head Start Begins In Hazard Schools

Project Head Start for the Hazard School District got underway on Monday of this week with an enrollment of 103 children who will enter first grade next fall.

The grant from the Office of Economic Opportunity was for 100 children so enrollment for all with family incomes of over $2000 has been closed. However, there are still a few children from families with incomes of less than $2000 who will be admitted if they can be persuaded to enroll.

The Hazard Center has the following professional personnel: Director Estill McIntyre and teachers Mrs. Mary Willoughby, Mrs. Mildred Stevens, Mrs. Carlene Shackelford, Mrs. Pearl Helton, Mrs. Anna Campbell, and Mrs. Cynthia McIntyre. All of these people underwent intensive orientation at the University last week.

In addition, the center employs two cooks, a combination bus driver-custodian, and six teachers' aides.

The children are transported to the Roy G. Eversole school by school bus at nine o'clock each morning. They are given a snack of cookies and milk soon after they arrive. Then engage in work, play, and listening activities until noon when they are given a hot lunch. After lunch they rest, work, and play until time to board the school bus for home at two o'clock.

The Center needs one item that is not furnished by the Office of Economic Opportunity—toys of all kinds, particularly larger toys such as tricycles, wagons, etc. for the boys and dolls, play dishes, etc. for the girls. Anyone having such toys that they are willing to contribute to Operation Head Start are asked to call the director or one of the teachers.

I Say What I Think

by S. C. VAN CURON

By S. C. Van Curon

The landmark decision of the Court of Appeals to assess property at fair cash value hasn't settled all of the problems of schools and other branches of government by any means.

In fact, it may have created a host of problems that will occupy the 1966 session of the General Assembly.

School districts with voted bond issues outstanding inherit an immediate problem. Rates are written into the bond indentures. Take a county with an average assessment now of 20 per cent on agriculture land and the school district has a voted 50 cents to retire bonds. If the ratio is raised to 100 per cent actually, then the bond levy immediately becomes an effective rate of $2.50 on the present assessment.

Some school districts have voted an extra 50-cent assessment for construction purposes, but no bonds are issued against the levy. A great many of these read 5 to 50 cents and leave the school district with authority to change the levy.

As pure speculation, it would seem the Court's decision obviates the necessity for Governor Edward T. Breathitt to call a special session late this month. The governor is to meet Monday with school leaders to hear what they have come up with in their series of district meetings.

At midweek, Jefferson County was the only one wanting a special session, and the idea has been to levy a one per cent occupation tax to support schools. Rural legislators probably are in no mood to meet when there is no legislation that would particularly affect them.

Another problem the Court's decision brings into prominence is the state's statutory levy of five cents per $100 valuation on real property for the general fund. The 100 per cent valuation decision would make this an effective 15 cents in the top assessed counties. In the case of Menifee where the ratio for farm property is 10.1 per cent it would be 10 times or an effective 50 cents.

School people obviously hope the legislature does not lower the statutory rate of $1.50 maximum for school purposes, but leave it to the good discretion of local authorities to lower rates accordingly to keep the tax bill near its present figures.

The big help is going to be in equalization of property assessments. It's no secret in Kentucky that comparative property in a county or community may vary as much as 50 per cent in assessment value for tax purposes. This is a disparity that the Court's decision will erase, most people hope, under regulations issued by the State Department of Revenue in issuing guidelines for tax commissioners to follow.

No one can flatly say now that 20 per cent assessments will be upped five times when the Court's mandate becomes effective in January 1966. Reason, Revenue Commissioner James E. Luckett and his staff have been busy compiling a mountain of information and preparing guide booklets to reach an equitable basis for assessments.

The chore has not been completed, but information from reliable sources indicate it will be in readiness for the 1966 session of the General Assembly.

The tax stamps on property transfers is not the only guideline available for preparing an assessment formula.

Consensus here among revenue people, school people, and local officials is that responsibility for providing revenue for government purposes will be put where it belongs—on the rate making bodies and not the assessor.

Undoubtely cries will be heard all across the land from anguished property owners, but anticipating pain is premature. Seriousness of the surgery cannot be determined until the legislature meets in January and proposals are placed for consideration.

WHILE IT IS FRESH

On my mind, I just wonder how many people noticed the flags on main street Sunday Memorial Day? It was indeed a sight I have never seen before. The only thing I could say was wrong with this display, was because they didn't leave it up through Monday. My hat must go off to the LIONS CLUB OF HAZARD, Although they do a wonderful work toward the helping of the kids in our area that need glasses to pursue their studies. This Flag program really did impress me as I drove through Main Street Sunday morning, May 30. It had an uplifting effect which I am sure it did the same to many of you as it did to me. It made you realize what the day was meant for. To all of you that have contributed to this, I must say it has brought out some pride to show that we are still alive here in EASTERN KY., I understand that the Lions Club would like to have another fifty flags by this time next year these to flow on the BY PASS, they are asking sponsors for each flag. To YOU BOTH BUSINESS PEOPLE AND PROFESSIONAL PEOPLE THAT HAVEN'T HELPED IN THIS PROJECT, I would say that you are letting a good deed go to waste. PRIDE TO ME of your area and community, can mean so much to the passing motorist. LETS ALL CIVIC CLUBS START AN EXTRA PROJECT SUCH AS THE LIONS CLUB HAS DONE. Lets all become a part of these projects.

I AM BEHIND

With many fishing reports, Barber Bill Adams caught a four pounder at Buckhorn, on night crawlers, twenty inches long just drifting. Walden Salyers Jr., seventeen years old 19" Smallmouth on Buckhorn Lake, craw fish was used for bait. Many of you have reported nice catches of blue gill and crappie from Buckhorn Lake. Chester Stacy has had exciting catching at on the head waters of Buckhorn, yes Chester Musky will hit most any time of the year. This I have had experience with. They are the most unpredicable fish I think that roam our waters. They can snatch you to pieces plus your tackle in short order.

IT WAS NICE

To see and talk with so many of you through this past spring, Glenn Branson of Long Beach, Calif., Glenn is a policeman out in that far away place from his old homestead, his father Everett was along on our visit and talks. Believe me he sure looks like the man you would expect to be a peace officer, yes one that you would have respect for. The only thing that bothers me is to see so many of you young people come back for a visit, when we should be using your talent right here with our own people. Maybe the pasture will turn greener one of these days toward home. Stop to think of it, what would have happened to many projects such as the GERMENT 4 project that went into orbit last week if our people from Eastern Ky. hadn't helped so it, where down the line.

BLESS MY HIDE

With all this space craft that has been in progress, I am like my old friend Mrs. Vest Hamilton from up MACEYS Creek Way, just as sure as spring comes around, it always brings the bees flowers and etc., above all Aunt Vesta says it sure brings out those HATCHING JACKETS. Believe me her prediction has hit the nail on the head. I often wonder if this keeps up if there will be enough land on this earth to take care of this ever increasing population. I doubt very much. If our fish and wildlife will hold out to the next few generations, maybe we must have to cultivate our streams such as England is trying to do. Like making them into farms Then we will be on a Commercial scale, may the powers above never let us the United States give into this category, may we always have the peace of outdoor recreatation that we the American people appreciate. Folks it is something to think about if you will want the next generations to enjoy mother nature as you have had the pleasure of doing.

IT HAS BEEN

PROVEN that it can be done, we have more game and fish today than our forefathers had in the early part of the century WHY because of careful management, enactment of laws, setting seasons. Who is responsible for all this It is people that did look to the future, people that helped organize such Organizations as your local Fish & Game Clubs, YOUR LEAGUE OF KY. Sportsmen, YOUR DEPT. OF FISH & WILDLIFE DEPT. How long has it been since your eyes smarted from the burning of the woodlands? Yes Folks it is time for you as an individual to step and take a part of helping preserve these great resources that we have left for the ones that will be following in your FOOTSTEPS. It would be a sad sight for the kids being born today, to never to be able to see trees, streams and all the glowing green that comes with spring, then the colors of autumn, then the dull season of winter, with the expectations to look forward to another glorious eruption of spring once again. To Me that is life, and its parts of us today to help pave the way for future generations. SO MANY OF YOU COULD BE LENDING A HELPING HAND TOWARD PROMOTING THESE THINGS YES YOU ARE EXPECTING SOME ONE ELSE TO CARRY YOUR PART.

We Must Have Faith In Ourselves

I have often heard people say, "I just can't do it." They have joined themselves to failure, and are not willing to shake themselves loose from the leaches that cling to them. When I was a lad on Birch River I often found my ankles loaded with leaches as I waded or swam the river. My first thought likely was to inquire what they were, and what they were doing so flat on my ankles. If I left them long enough they would turn red from sucking the blood from my body. So I learned the hard way to scrape them clear of my ankles and destroy them dead.

All through our lives we are gathering leaches of one kind or another on us. Sometimes it may be the bad habit that clings to us, and sucks out life-blood. It may be diseases that plow through our bodies, or it may be immoral living that brings us down to distruction far before our time.

We must be always watching and dodging those ugly things that feed on us, and destroy them before they destroy us. We have gone far enough in medical science to know that our lives are far longer now than they were in our grandfather's days. It begins to look like we may be mere infants at the age of 50. All this increase of life and usefulness has been brought about by our observing rules of health, and it will continue to be so for many generations to come. We may wonder why we are living so long, and for what purpose; but we will leave that wonder for you to answer.

Life is so rich, beautiful, and rewarding for this generation that we must not break faith with ourselves. We must keep our real faith alive. We must think well of ourselves, and develope all the skills God has given us for useful living in these great and wonderful days.

One of the finest qualities of our lives is that thing we call FAITH IN OURSELVES. If we downgrade ourselves who will upgrade us? I play golf with people from many parts of the nation when I am alone and pick up a partner, or two. One of the stocks in the trade of the game is early shown when some of them say, "I am not much of a golfer." Then when the whiz away and cut it away out under a palm tree they begin to downgrade themselves or their ball or club. I have long ago taken up the habit of saying, "We will have no downgrading our yourself while we play on this course, and as for downgrading your ball, you can quit that, for the ball will go exactly where you drive it." All golfers, including Bill Blair, Whitesburg, know that is the way it is. I have seen some good games of golf after the period of the loss of faith in the player has been restored.

Sometimes it is necessary for us to take an accounting of ourselves and give ourselves a boost, a hike, or a kick in the seat of the pants. Too many of us are likely to fold up and quit just when we are ready to win, or do something good.

This will hold good in church life. A person who may feel himself unworthy can find himself very useful if he will only try, and try, and try again, until he becomes a professional friend of our church services. Away down on the Big Sandy I once called on a man who looked rather religious, and was a professional religionist, to lead the little country church congregation in prayer. He declined by saying, "Preacher, you will have to excuse me I have a sore leg." The beauty and usefulness of our lives can be expressed in every helpful way we may give to the good of others. Let us rub the leaches off of us and go to church next Sunday, and offer ourselves to help others.

Start Now To Prevent Poverty Programs

Such as we have to day, it sure has come at an oportune time, I think we should appreciate the leaders of our nation to realize the needs of our people. The leaders today are paying the penalty of others in the past such as our forefathers, they believed that our NATURAL RESOURCES WOULD ALWAYS BE FORE COMING, Folks you don't grow a tree over night, you don't create a seam of coal overnight. The things of nature don't reproduce overnight. LET'S ALL START NOW to lending a hand to prevent POVERTY PROGRAMS for our future generations. It doesn't take man long now to take away from nature, that it took many hundreds of years to produce we must realize this in order to leave something for the generations that is following us. Don't say there is nothing let to do, to me it is a great challenge now to help restore our resources here in EASTERN KY., It is easy to give up, but it takes courage to push forward in odds that seem to be great. On the other hand our forefathers faced great odds when they came in to this land of ours. At last many of our people are waking up to the facts that we have been pulverized to what you thought you owned in regard to your natural resources. Don't let it happen to the next generation. START CHANGING AND HELPING MAKE LAWS NOW. Our forefathers didn't realibe what they were doing many years ago, lets wise up now to prevent the same thing happening to the ones that are following in your footsteps. In the first CHAPTER OF GENESIS OF THE BIBLE, IT STATES THAT THESE MANY THINGS OF NATURE WERE PLACED UPON THIS EARTH FOR MAN TO USE WISELY FOR HIS OWN BENEFITS. HAS HE DONE IT? FOLKS READ IT IN THIS CHAPTER.

Total-Electric ... Everybody benefits

Low-cost electricity is the ambition of every progressive electric utility company. As customers use more electricity new advanced more efficient power producing facilities can be built—and such facilities help make possible lower electric rates. It is this cycle of low rates that leads to greater use, to greater efficiency and to still lower rates.

We have just announced another series of rate reductions of more than $216,700. Such reductions over the past three years have meant savings to our customers of over $497,200.

TOTAL-ELECTRIC SCHOOLS ARE THE BIGGEST BARGAIN IN ANY COMMUNITY'S EDUCATIONAL BUDGET

Of special significance in our latest rate reductions is one cent per kilowatt-hour electricity for Total-Electric public and parochial schools. We are especially proud of this low rate because it helps offset the increasing costs faced by schools today.

School administrators are now finding that Total-Electric schools cost less to build, to finance, to maintain, to expand and to operate. These advantages mean that those who foot the educational bills – including all taxpayers – get more for their money.

OUR POLICY IS TO REDUCE RATES WHENEVER POSSIBLE

We believe our policy of reducing rates —and of holding the line on costs—has a strong economic impact on the area we serve. It stimulates growth, helps provide jobs for people and contributes to raising the standard of living.

We are dedicated to the objective of providing superior electric service at the lowest possible cost. This dedication has made the American Electric Power System, of which Kentucky Power Company is a part, the largest investor-owned electric power producer in the United States.

Strip Mining Controversey

We do not mean to belabor the subject of strip mining to the point of incoherence and boredom. But it is a lively topic these days, kept that way by property owners who have begun to resist the strippers, and by mine operators themselves who defend their practices, both in published statements and through the courts. We feel obliged to reflect the size and scope of that controversey by granting an appropriate amount of space to it in our columns.

As with any newspaper that tries to maintain an editorial page containing frank opinions about controversial subjects, we are particularly aware of the difficulties involved in also providing responsible, objective news coverage during this strip mining dispute. We have our own opinions about strip mining, and we express them. But we also have the obligation to confine those opinions to the editorial page, while devoting our front page to fair and impartial coverage of all local happenings.

The best way we know to do this is, first of all, to stick to facts in our news, and to make every effort to equalize the totality of those facts between both sides of the controversey. The other thing that we can do, and have done, is to open our columns to any responsible person who has an opinion to express regardless of what that opinion is.

Hence, we were glad to publish in Monday's Herald the lengthy statement in defense of strip mining by Fred B. Bullard, President of the Kentucky Coal Operators Association as well as the letter elsewhere on this page from Wiley Adams, which roundly criticizes the Herald. This is in keeping with our policy of giving the public an opportunity to air, in print, its views on any subject of local significance, in an effort to arrive at some accomodation of conflicting points of view.

But, just as the Herald expects to have its editorials criticized and disagreed with, so too must those who publish their opinions be willing to have them challenged and debated. We are fortunate that there is a tradition in this country of recognizing certain bounds of reason and restraint and mutual respect in arguments of this type. It is possible among civilized people to engage in energetic debate on an idea without meaning to insult the individual you disagree with, or becoming involved in personalities.

Or, said another way, friends can disagree, and even fight ideological battles, and still remain friends.

These, then, are our arguments against some of the points made by our friend Mr. Bullard and those strip mine operators he spoke in behalf of in his statement in Monday's Herald:

Mr. Bullard is certainly misinformed when he alleges that the people of Clear Creek in Knott County are "advised and directed by outsiders" in their fight against strip miners.

No doubt the strippers would like to believe this, and would like the public to believe it too. Discrediting the motives of people who protest is a common tactic used by those who are the objects of the protest. Insinuating that those who are protesting are merely "dupes" of some mysterious "outsider" is a handy device to turn attention from the actual point of controversey.

Of course it is no compliment to have hundreds of people looking upon you as a villain, as the folks on Clear Creek see the strippers and perhaps the strippers actually cannot comprehend why all those people whose land they are stripping do not admire them. Perhaps the only conclusion they can really come to is that they are being stirred up by "outsiders."

To suppose this is indicative of just how little the strip miners actually know about the people who own the land they strip. It shows the gulf of misunderstanding between them, and illustrates one reason why the current argument is so hot.

If the strippers would deign to try to see this thing from someone else's point of view, they would find that their opponents are not the kind who would even listen to "outsiders," but who stand on their own two feet because of their own sense of what is right and wrong. They would find that their opponents are not anyone's pawn, but just good people—teachers, small businessmen, home owners and tax payers—who feel their private property is being destroyed against their will.

Another statement from Mr. Bullard's article that is indicative of the varied and conflicting attitudes toward strip mining, and toward the land in general is this: "It is true that some slides do occur, especially on hillsides too steep to serve any useful purpose, such as gardening."

The key phrase there is "too steep to serve any useful purpose." No doubt the strip miners cannot see any "purpose" for much of the land they uproot, or else they would not so eagerly uproot it.

But the people who own that land have a different way of looking at it. In the first place, they feel that, since they own it, it is their business to decide what is useless and what is not, and they quite naturally resent a coal operator who makes that decision for them.

And even if it is useless now, for such things as gardening, who can say what the future holds in store? Who knows what need our children and their children's children a hundred years from now will have for this land that is being destroyed because it is "useless?"

The property owners feel that this "useless" business is too much like the arguments of the old buffalo hunters who slaughtered that animal in wholesale lots simply because they didn't personally have any use for it. Maybe the men who killed off the buffalo didn't understand the animal's purpose, but the Indians certainly knew its purpose, and we all know how hard the Indian fought to protect what he needed to survive and what he felt belonged to him.

These people in Knott County, and all over Eastern Kentucky, feel the same way about their land. To them it has value because their homes are built on it, and it is where they want to live.

But, even if some of their land can in truth be declared worthless, just how did it happen to get that way?

The people of Knott County can tell you. There are men living today who well remember the timber that use to grow in these hills, men who know what the Kentucky mountain soil is capable of producing if it is treated with respect. They remember towering trees by the thousands, and they also remember, less fondly, the big lumber companies who came in and cut them mercilessly, chopping down every tree and sapling they could get a penny for until what might have been a fantastic heritage of timber wealth for generations to come was destroyed in a few years by greedy men who had no regard or respect for the future.

To get at the immediate egg, they killed the magnificent goose that laid it, and this is precisely what the people who protest against strip mining fear is happening to them. They look at the hills and see no timber, and neither do they see the lumber companies. For they came, and cut, and soon were gone, and left the mountaineer only his ravaged land. The people who protest against strip mining wonder if some day they might look out and not even see the hills, much less the trees that disappeared.

For they are under no illusions: they strip the top seams now, number seven and number nine, and know that it is only a matter of time before they strip the lower seams as well.

The strippers say their intentions are better than that, however. Some point to land reclamation efforts, and talk of turning Eastern Kentucky into the next jelly empire. Many of the strippers are honestly commited to restoring some of the land they have "disturbed." They are even sincere when they talk about the future of the elderberry industry, not realizing that every mention of elderberries convulses a whole region with laughter. (Go talk elderberries to the folks on Clear Creek!)

But what they do not seem to understand is the high liklihood that the property owner may not only want his land left alone, but may not want to raise elderberries, or "love grass" or fruit trees, or whatever they come up with next. Perhaps that property owner doesn't want to do anything with his land but look at it. Doesn't he have a right to? How can that violated desire be reclaimed by any method?

The Herald's elaborate defense of the right of property owners to protect their land from unwanted strip mine damage may strike some readers as a condemnation of mining in general. Some may think that we are arguing that all coal operators be put out of business just so the property owners can have a nice view.

This is not the case. We realize the importance of coal to Eastern Kentucky. We have many friends who are coal operators. We understand their desire to make a profit, and we hope the coal business always flourishes. We have certainly not said that strip mining should be outlawed altogether. We don't know if it should or shouldn't be. If we could look on the situation from the vantage of a hundred years from now, perhaps we could make an absolute judgement. It all depends on what is best for the mountains in the long run.

But it is perfectly clear to anyone who looks at the situation objectively that the present situation is not tolerable, that the property owners have a just complaint, and that some new and original accomodation must be discovered. Now that the property owners have raised their grievance, the burden of justifying the stripping process rests with the stripper.

Mr. Bullard partially attempted to justify the strip mine industry by referring to "several plans for industrial development in Eastern Kentucky which would mean a good deal to the area's future." Other spokesmen for the coal operators have also indicated a great concern for our future, and a philanthropic intention to help guarantee it. These concerns do not justify the worst of the abuses of stripping, but they are welcome just the same, and we do not doubt their sincerity.

In fact, this welcome concern makes it appropriate to suggest a way in which the coal industry could really demonstrate its devotion to Eastern Kentucky, in an immediate and tangible way. This way is for the Coal Operators Association to go on record, now, in favor of a small severance tax on all coal taken from Kentucky's hills, a tax that would go into the treasuries of our local governments, perhaps earmarked primarily for our schools.

A gesture of this nature is necessary if the coal industry is to convince the people of Eastern Kentucky it is ultimately for them instead of for itself.

1965 KENTUCKY HOMECOMING YEAR

OUR READERS WRITE

Says Herald Committed Crime

Dear Mr. Editor:

What in the world is the Hazard Herald trying to do to the people of Perry and Knott counties? Is it trying to destroy our jobs and put us out of work? Don't you have any feeling whatsoever for us people who depend upon coal mining by the strip method for our Livelihood?

As a man who supports a wife and six (6) children with my wages from the Kenmont Coals, Inc., I resent that article which you printed June 10 which said that strip-miners are a thousand times more destructive than the dynamiters and arsonists.

That article was downright terrible and I think it will also be resented by every family in Perry and Knott counties which gets its income from strip-mining, and there are hundreds of such families.

I am a strip-miner, and I don't at all like to be compared with a criminal, like you did. I consider my family respectable. We attend church, we pay taxes, we try to bring up our children as good citizens.

By what right have you to say that we are like criminals?

I urge every family in Perry and Knott county, every family which draws wages from strip-mining, to rise up in wrath against your mean accusations.

Don't you realize that if you kill strip-mining, as you seem to want to do, families and businesses all over Knott and Perry county would suffer? Where else would we go to get Jobs?

Mr. editor I think that you have committed a crime against the people of your county and Knott County too.

Respectfully,
Wiley Adams
Cornettsville, Ky.

P. L. Johnson vs. City Hall

Dear Editor:

It has not been made clear publically what the remaining debt is on the city water plant, sewage plant, and parking and lots.

A city letter of February 12, 1964 was issued regarding street improvement assessment (after assessment was paid) stating that the amount was inaccurate and the assessment was upped The mistake of the calculator, human or mechanical, was a whopper for 30.9% increase was added in the city's favor.

Furthermore before the next fall election a clear public statement is needed showing how the city's affairs have been handled regarding the remaining debts of the water plant, sewage plant, and parking.

The city people are not familiar with the total annual salaries of the city personnel. The city's public statements show the hard to follow split-ups. The public school systems, city and county, make public the annual salaries of each teacher. That method used is needed.

Yours very truly,

Disputes Operator's Claim

To The Editor:

I would like to say a few things in regard to statements made by Kentucky River Coal Sales executives.

First, I doubt the validity of Mr. Bullard's statement that incidents occurring on Clear Creek at the strip mine operation could cause Eastern Kentucky to lose possible economic projects that might otherwise be acquired. Hogwash! Such a statement as this is designed only to brainwash and pacify an aroused and indignant public; to subtly cloak the atrocities of strip mining. If Mr. Bullard really wished to economically uplift Eastern Kentucky, why doesn't he use his influence to persuade some large chemical firm and a huge bakery firm to locate here in Eastern Kentucky. The chemical firm could process our streams to recover sulphuric acid and the bakery could conduct research on mud pies. This way, all Appalachians could have jobs and some of us might even become gourmets tasting and testing such delectable items as mud pies.

Second, I wish to challenge statement made by William Sturgill. He said it was common practice for the company to compensate for any damages incurred to the property owner. What he failed to mention was the damage done to folks for miles below strip mine operations. Not only damage of mud and filth, to tangible property, but also mental anguish from living in perpetual fear each time it rains. People can never be compensated for being driven from their homes, where they were born and reared. As far as I am concerned, some $196,000 allegedly paid most property owners in real damages could not begin to compensate for even one small stream eternally polluted by acid water, ruined for posterity as well as the present generation.

Dollars and cents can never compensate for sentimental and aesthetic value of any property, nor can dollars and cents ever compensate for the degradation of a man's home, property, pride, human dignity, and pursuit of happiness. All this inevitably follows any strip mine operation conducted in the mountains.

Sincerely,
Sidney Ritchie
Ritchie, Ky.

Personal Opinion

This column is made available to readers of the Hazard Herald who have opinions to express that require more space than a letter-to-the-editor will permit. As in our letters column, opinions set forth here do not necessarily reflect the thinking of this newspaper.

Strip Mine Victim Tells His Story

I, Leroy Martin, the newly elected chairman of The Appalachian Group To Save The Land And The People, would like to beg the citizens of this wonderful state of ours, to come to the aid of the people in Eastern Kentucky, in helping us to get legislation passed that will stop the havoc and damage of the strip and auger mine operators.

"I pledge myself as an American, to save, and to safely defend from waste, the natural resources of my country, its soil, forests, water, minerals and wildlife." This, the CONSERVATION PLEDGE, I think, expresses the feelings of our group. This newly organized group offers some hope from the depradations of the strip and auger mine operators in our area.

I was an heir to some property in the path of a strip mine operator. One day I was approached by their representative and told that they were going through my property. Being the only one of the heirs left in our area I decided to act for the rest of them. I went to our County Court Clerk's Office and read the copy of the mineral deed that was on record. I didn't find an actual signature of my grandfather, who had sold the mineral at all, all that I found was this copy in this book. After reading this copy of the mineral deed I sought the advice of several lawyer's and was told by each of them that I didn't have a leg to stand on according to the new STRIP MINE LAW. I contacted the company representative again and was told that they didn't have to pay me anything but it was company policy to pay the landowner 25c a foot for the number seven seam and 50c a foot for the number nine seam. The land company sharks had swindled my grandfather out of his mineral for the tremendous sum of 50c an acre. (You can imagine what an acre of coal 5½ or six feet thick was worth, not counting the gas and oil and other mineral.) This representative of the strip mine operator said that this was a goodwill payment, a handout. I told him that this seemed like a very small amount for the damages that they were doing to the surface and the timber. He told me that our Court of Appeals, our court of last resort in our State had ruled that the company was not liable to any property damage at all. I told him that this seemed kind of unfair because my father and grandfather had paid taxes for over fifty years and he was telling me that the company really owned it after all. He said that according to our courts this was right. The Law is on our side. I went ahead and made a settlement with him and the company made a check to each of the heirs, which according to him was a handout.

The company moved in and started stripping and augering the coal. Hundreds of dollars worth of timber was destroyed and the surface, where they went was damaged beyond reclamation. (I know that this is so because I have a BS Degree in Agriculture from Western State College.)

This is when I really woke up to the fact that something had to be done and fast or Eastern Kentucky would be beyond the point of no return. I came to the conclusion that if we had Laws that would allow a company to push over the citizens like this that we no longer had any freedom. The corrupt, rotten politicians have actually stolen our rights as citizens. Our group feels very strongly that our rights of citizens of America have been badly violated. When a company is given the right to destroy peoples homes and endanger their lives it is time that the citizens take a stand and take the necessary action to get new legislation that will give the people back the freedom that the Constitution of the United tates guarantee's them before it is everlastingly too late.

I own a small boundary of timber and a home on Lotts Creek, in Knott County. I obtained a Farmer's Home Administration Loan and remodeled my home. I have spent my entire life's earnings and am in debt trying to give my family some of the comforts of life and now the strip mine operator tells me that the coal back of my home is going to be stripped and that they don't even have to pay me damages. At the set price of 25c a foot for the number seven seam and 50c a foot for the number nine seam of coal the most I could hope to get would be around $200.00. Friends this isn't much for a twelve thousand dollar investment. (Not counting the taxes and insurance.) If a boulder didn't tear it apart, my home would be left with this huge mountain of loose dirt, rocks, and trees, hanging there threatening to cover it every time it rains. The mud would come off and fill the small stream flowing by my house and the road up the creek would be torn up and destroyed. If it is not torn down and destroyed it is made worthless because it is inaccessible. I ask you, the people of this state and nation, "Is this justice?" If this is justice what has happened to our Constitution? What has happened to the America that so many of our friends and relatives have fought and died for? If the people in Eastern Kentucky and throughout the Nation don't wake up and help us get some legislation passed to give us back some of the rights of citizens of America the money our Federal Government is spending in the Appalachian area might just as well be poured into an outhouse pit.

EDITORIAL

New Tax Ruling

The general feeling among property owners seems to be that the Court of Appeals' ruling on 100 per cent tax assessments is a small disaster that threatens to bring chaos to the state, bankrupting people of modest incomes while sending what industry we have packing to other states.

Well, perhaps if no effort was made to cope with this new situation, an economic disaster of sorts could occur. If the situation were let to drift along unattended, then we might well end up in chaos.

But of course this is not going to happen, and all the worry many of us feel now is unnecessary. Curiosity, maybe, but not panic-stricken worry. The administration cannot afford to totally alienate the entire population for a lot of reasons, the pending bond issue among them. The administration has already begun to try to turn the Court's ruling into an advantage, and we feel that it will be able to do just that.

As it works out the details of a modernized tax structure, we would only remind the administration of the many, many property owners who live on fixed incomes, incomes that will not stand a great tax increase.

And we remind the general public that the Court of Appeals is only enforcing Kentucky's constitution when it asks for 100 per cent assessments. If the public doesn't like that arrangement, it should support the current effort to revise and modernize our old charter, to streamline it for the space age instead of the sleepy old 1890's when it was written.

Part Two: Caudill Says Appalachian Bill Fails To Deal With Main Problems

By Harry Caudill

The redevelopment program is noteworthy because of its glaring omissions. Appalachia is a beautiful country whose major resource is bituminous coal. Its wooded hills are stuffed with the fuel, and mining has shaped its tragic history. Any effort to revitalize this region without giving serious attention to the chaotic coal industry is nonsensical.

Until about 1948 coal was an immense industry, the counterpart of steel. As a mass employer, it was beset by oil and gas and advancing mining technology, and collapsed abruptly. Scores of coal companies were forced out of business in the 1950's, and those remaining in operation were compelled to mechanize to an astonishing degree. Thus hordes of industrial workmen were left stranded in the mining communities. They were men who had been educated for the mines; their communities were poorly built and were without decent schools, hospitals, or roads. In the last decade the jerry-built communities have turned into people-sties. The land is scarred with crumbling shacks, tipples, commissaries, and culm heaps. The demoralized people, long dependent on public assistance for their bread, have littered the roadsides and streams with countless automobile hulks and trash dumps. The creeks and rivers are reeking sewers.

Many miners earn a subsistence living digging coal with hand tools from thin seams. These "dog-hole" operations lack the protection of the federal mine safety code and are in a hopeless competition with strip mines and the large mechanized pits. The land is being ripped apart by surface miners. Simply put, the region's main source of income, its coal industry, borders on anarchy. PARC, however, blandly ignored this salient fact.

The commission might have recommended a giant cleanup campaign for Appalachia; without this, it is impossible to see how the morale of the people can be restored. Children growing up in the incredible squalor of the typical mining community fall naturally into the ruinous, sometimes rapacious habits of their elders. Yet the possibility of clearing away the befouled landscape was not even considered.

The rest of the nation has cause for alarm in the pollution constantly emanating from this tortured region. Some five hundred gigantic culm heaps — man-made mountains of mining wastes and low-grade coal — containing millions of tons of fuel, are forever burning. Their acrid fumes cloak countless valleys. Simultaneously, billions of gallons of sulfuric acid water drain daily from unsealed mines and open coal auger holes. These nauseous contaminants must be restrained if Appalachia is to shed its grim reputation. A feeble start toward this goal is authorized by the legislation, but the task will be hard, and its ultimate cost will be high indeed.

The zooming American population gives Appalachia a genuine potential as a recreation area, but this potential is being aborted by the ravages of strip mining. New machines, including the giant rubber-tire high lifts now coming on the market, make it certain that surface mines will multiply and that their onslaught upon the land will quicken. A feeble gesture at alleviating this murder of the land is proposed in the legislation, but an amendment to the bill limits reclamation to publicly owned land. Since nearly all the torn earth is privately owned, the section dealing with strip mining is without practical meaning. According to the testimony of Pennsylvania

Governor William Scranton, a quarter of a million acres of land in his state have already been ruined. Unless strip mining is prohibited in the near future, the coalfields will be churned into total wreckage.

The coal industry urgently needs a stable year-round market. Such a market is available, but PARC and Congress are ignoring it. The Edison Electric Institute has estimated that $175 billion will have to be invested in new electricity-generating facilities within twenty years if a power shortage is to be averted. The trend in the electric-power industry is toward large mine-mouth generators, the power going to market by extra-high-voltage transmission lines. Such plants could be constructed in Appalachia with their power output carried cheaply and efficiently into all the great cities east of the Mississippi. The American Public Power Association, the National Rural Electric Co-operative Association, and a research group sponsored by Lockheed Space and Missile Company have concluded that these plants are feasible and that their product could be profitably marketed. And a small developmental royalty of perhaps one half mill per kilowatt hour produced woud plow hundreds of millions of dollars back into regional facilities and services within a decade or two. Thus Appalachia could in large measure finance its own rehabilitation.

Such plants would make cheap power available everywhere in the Appalachian range. The lakes created to provide cooling water for the huge coal-burning generators would curtail the ravages of floods, simultaneously supplying water for new industries which the low-cost electricity would attract to the area. As in the Tennessee Valley, the lakes would bring fishermen, sportsmen, and vacationers. The modern trinity—electricity, water, and fertilizer — which has wrought such miracles for the TVA, is sorely needed in the valleys of Appalachia, but PARC and the Congress refused to learn from the nation's first great and successful attempt to rejuvenate a dying segment of the country.

To its credit, PARC considered electric-power development as a means of aiding the region's economy and requested congressional authorization for a full-scale power study. The Congress, goaded by lobbyists for the private power interests, moved with alacrity in the opposite direction and expressly prohibited the use of Appalachian Redevelopment Funds for the generation, transmission, or sale of electricity. Thus Appalachia, a land of heavy rainfall and vast coal reserves, is denied the blessings of cheap power — blessings bestowed by federal action on the Tennessee Valley and most of the West.

The great need of the Appalachian people is education. The schools everywhere are poor, often abominable. Most of America's one-room schools are in highland counties, 40 percent of them in eastern Kentucky alone. The adult illiteracy rate is appallingly high. Teachers' salaries average about $1000 per year under national averages. The best teachers moved away years ago. The states refuse to levy severance taxes on minerals for the support of the schools. New generations are born into the old relentless cycle of poor people, poor schools, poor job preparation, poor pay, more poor people. Yet excet for a modest appropriatetion for vocational education. PARC made no recommendations for improvement of the public schools. As matters now stand, the Administration's pending aid-to-education bill offers more long-range hope to the mountaineers than do PARC's remedial measures.

Another notion that a serious program would have embraced is the concept of new towns. At least two thirds of the thirds of the existing housing is dilapidated. Much of the populace is spread out in string towns that stretch up the winding creek valleys. Other tens of thousands are clustered in crumbling coal camps. All these communities lack adequate water supplies, and the available water is generally polluted. In fact, public health officials in one typical eastern Kentucky county recently estimated that 76 percent of the drinking water is "grossly contaminated." It is practically impossible to service the communities with adequate public facilities. Student transportation alone is a back-breaking burden on the meager school systems. The roads are for the most part ribbons of mud, and if new ones are built, maintenance costs will be extremely high. The people spread out in this fashion years ago when "new grund" farming was their principal livelihood. Now farming is passe. Even the family vegetable garden is disappearing. No valid justification for living on rough and isolated creeks exists at the present time.

By every reasonable standard the people would be far better off living in towns, where the amenities of life could be supplied at bearable costs. A few well-planned, solidly built, and strongly organized new municipalities would absorb much of the present dwindling population and would bring new talent into the region. Both the Atomic Energy Commission and the Tennessee Valley Authority have had experience in building new cities. Their experience could have been invaluable in any undertaking to organize, house, and service the Appalachian population properly. The "new town" concept was urged upon PARC as an obvious and much-needed remedial measure, but those bold planners wasted no thought upon it.

The provision for building and financing hospitals is a patent absurdity. New hospitals can be built, and under some circumstances funds can be made available for their operation, but existing hospitals cannot be aided. Ten hospitals owned by Appalachian Regional Hospitals, Incorporated, were bought from the United Mine Workers of America's Health and Welfare Fund with federal money advanced by the Area Redevelopment Administration. This nonprofit corporation has done an excellent job of administering the hospital chain, maintaining superb standards and paying union wages to its employees. It has begun to operate in the black despite a fantastically high charity load. Yet these institutions — the best public facilities in Appalachia — are threatened with extinction for lack of operating capital. The administrators of the Appalachian Regional Development Act will be powerless to aid them. They may be compelled to watch these immensely beneficial hospitals close for lack of funds while simultaneously financing the construction of others.

An effort to obtain an amendment beneficial to satisfactory existing hospitals brought stern admonitions from PARC and congressional sponsors of the act that no changes could be tolerated, not even so much as "a single comma." However, when it came to another matter, Senator Robert Kennedy of New York was not deterred by such notions. His amendment to add thirteen relatively prosperous New York counties to Appalachia was promptly approved, and by legislative flat the prosperous inhabitants of comparatively scrubbed upstate New York cities and towns became fellow sufferers with the miserable people of the Cumberland Plateau.

Paradoxically, not all of Appalachia is poor. There are "growth centers" within the region which are prosperous by national norms. In these areas — for example, Kingsport, Tennessee — industry has begun to diversify. Bank deposits are high. Schools, hospitals, libraries, and other public facilities and services are good by Appalachian standards. These islands of affluence in a sea of poverty grow as much by attracting people from other parts of America as by highlanders out of the surrounding countryside. A cruel provision in the legislation requires all the development funds to be spent in such a manner as to expedite the expansion of these fortunate centers of prosperity and growth. The fact that only a relatively handful of mountaineers live there did not deter PARC's planners. The growth of a few small cities will not affect the tens of thousands of people stranded in such abysmal backwaters as Hellier, Kentucky, and Stonega, Virginia.

Sorely needed is a plan of development based on the total environment of Appalachia, a plan that indexes and utilizes all its resources of people, soil, water, timber, and minerals to build a viable economy and a healthy social order for the entire territory. The accentuation of a spotty prosperity will make the rich wealthier still without alleviating the misery of the poor. This is a reversal of American policy in the development of the Tennessee Valley and of our great Western territories. Here is a new national policy which declares that when an American region falls into misfortune, only a few of the people and only a part of the land will be rescued, with the aid going to those who need it least.

What, then, will be the consequence of this loudly trumpeted legislation for putting more than $1 billion of taxpayers' money into Appalachia? If we ask, in a paraphrase of John Kennedy, not what it will do for us but for our country, the answer has to be a dismal one. The future of Appalachia is bleak indeed. The absentee landlords are pillaging the countryside of its coal, oil, gas, and timber. With the exception of a few counties in Pennsylvania, Tennessee, and North Carolina, little of value is being manufactured anywhere in the huge territory. PARC's scheme will accelerate the bleeding of resources without relieving the region's most pressing ills. The hopes of the people have been stirred. Disillusionment is sure to follow. The old people are dying. The young are leaving. The middle-aged subsist on the dole. In the estimation of the corporations that control the resources, most of the inhabitants are simply superfluous. Their lands are worn out. They possess no skills that the nation needs. Perhaps if they are retrained, they, too, will go away and stop bothering the public conscience. Appalachia is becoming a dark island near the heart of America, peopled in large measure by be-numbed human relics and totally despoiled of its natural resources.

Perhaps the superhighways the governors, PARC, and Congress have prescribed will bring some tourists to shake their heads sadly over this end result of man's greed and folly. It has been said that Appalachia, like Rip Van Winkle, slept through an entire age. Its backwoods people went to sleep in the agricultural age and were little disturbed until the dawn of the age of cybernetics.

Perhaps so. In any event, those who had hoped for a meaningful Appalachian development program as far-reaching and revolutionary as was TVA thirty years ago have been bitterly disappointed. Unless Congress takes a new look at its number one trouble spot and unless the American public is aroused as the people of England werearoused over the fate of Wales forty years ago. Appalachia can go back to sleep — the sodden sleep of the improverished, the embittered, and the hopeless.

Dad's Biggest Day...Grandad's, Too! JUNE 20th

MY DAD'S DINNER PAIL

Preserve that old kettle, so blackened and worn;
It belonged to my father before I was born;
It hung in a corner beyant on a nail—
'Twas the emblem of labor, my dad's dinner pail.
Chorus:

It glistened like silver, so sparkling and bright;
I am fond of the trifle that held his wee bite;
In summer or winter; in snow, rain or hail,
I've carried that kettle, my dad's dinner pail,
When the bell rang for mealtime my father'd come down—
He'd eat with the workmen about on the ground;
He'd share with the laborer and he'd go bail,
You would never reach the bottom of dad's dinner pail,
If the day should be rainy my father'd stop home,
And he'd polish his kettle as clane as a stone;
He'd joke with my mother and me he would whale.
If I put a finger on dad's dinner pail.
There's a place for the coffee and also for bread,
The corned beef and praties, and oft it was said:
"Go fill it with porter, with beer or with ale,"

EDWARD HARRIGAN

Editor's Note: In observance of Father's Day this Sunday, June 20, we searched for a poem to honor Fathers. We felt the poem above, "Dad's Dinner Pail" is very true in many cases in this area as well as being interesting.

Meeting In Interest Of Youth Program

A meeting to get the Neighborhood Youth Corp Program underway in Perry County was held Friday, June 18 by Mayor William Dawahare, the Perry County Advsoiry Council, and representatives of the Perry County and Hazard City School systems.

Whether or not Perry County will receive the grant for this program will be determined Wednesday, June 23, when James Greenwald and other Youth Corp officials will come to Hazard to examine what steps the committee has completed in establishing the Program.

The Program, which is set up on a 26-week basis, is scheduled to begin July 12 and end January 11, 1966.

For this county the Program will be in two divisions: In-School Program and Out-School Program. These sections will be sub-divided into City School, County School, and City-County Out of School Programs. As each division must have a sponsor, the In-School Program will be sponsored by the two school systems and the Out-School Program will be sponsored by the Perry County Advisory Committee. There will also be project directors and supervisors.

In accordance with the Kentucky Department of Labor, the Program will provide jobs for students during summer vacation and during the school term. Other applicants must have been out of school for at least six months. To be eligible for the Program, one must be between the ages of 16-21, unemployed, have permanent residence in the United States, be of economically disadvantaged circumstances, in school with need of paid-work training, out of school with need of paid-work training and intention of continuing education, or out of school with need of paid-work training and not planning to continue education.

The main problem of the committee is finding jobs for these people.

Those accepted for the Program will work in some public office approximately 24 to 30 hours a week at $1.25 per hour during summer vacation and approximately ten hours a week during the school term at the same rate.

"As the primary purpose of the Program is to encourage young people to complete high school and college or train for a vocation," Mayor Dawahare stated. "Of all the programs that have come to Hazard and Perry County, this is by far the greatest because it's going to help these children make something of themselves."

Screening Program Participants Asked To Pick Up Cards

Persons who participated in the screening program for preschool children and parents at the Perry County Health Department during September and October last fall may now pick up their "Screening Project Blood Type Identification" cards.

These cards, which contain your name and Blood type, should be carried at all times. In an emergency, the information provided could help save your life.

Anyone who participated in the screening program is urged to come by the Health Department in Hazard and pick up his card.

City Police Report Break In Sunday

Hazard City Police report a break in at the Hazard Cleaning and Laundry Company on East Main Street sometime during last night.

According to Chief Bud Luttrell about $20.00 was taken from three soft drink machines. Two machines were badly damaged the chief added.

A College Yes, Or College No!

A lively discussion was had at Thursday's meeting of the Hazard Lions Club. Some two years or more ago on the representation that the Stewart Robinson School properties could be immediately put to use as being suitable for a college, the Hazard Lions and other civic groups endorsed the Blackey location and the use of such properties.

When it turned out that the Blackey properties were not suitable for a college and have since been sold to some private school group the members of the Lions Club felt that that part of the college plan went out of the picture and that the college should be located where experienced school people connected with the University of Kentucky decided it would serve the greatest need.

On that level it would seem Perry County would be the logical place for the college. It would be so much closer for so many more high school graduates. It was voted that a telegram be sent to the committee explaining the present feeling of the Lions Club.

State Court of Appeals Upholds Conviction In Criminal Libel Suit

In a split decision Friday the Kentucky Court of Appeals upheld the conviction of Steve Ashton on criminal libel charges.

Ashton was convicted in Perry Circuit Court in 1963 following an incident that came out of the labor trouble of '63.

The New York City youth was fined $3000.00 and sentenced to 6 months in jail for publishing a pamphlet which allegedly defamed Hazard Police Chief Bud Luttrell, Perry County Sheriff Charlie Combs and Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Nolan, publishers of the Hazard Herald.

The lawyers for Ashton contended that the nature of the common law offense was so vague and inclusive that it deprived their client of his freedom of speech and due process

Three of the seven justices who dissented: Chief Justice John Moremen, and Judges Brady Stewart and James Milliken said the English common law of criminal libel is consistent with constitutional provisions.

They added that elements of the crime are so indefinite and uncertain that it should not be enforced as an offense in Kentucky.

He said Ashton admits that certain statements from the pamphet, "Notes on a Mountain Strike," were defamatory and false.

He pointed out that the trial judge made a commendable effort to identify the crime more fully than was done in the indictment.

According to Clay the crime of criminal libel is recognized throughout the United States.

"It makes no difference that no evidence was defered to show that Ashton's defamatory statements actually were made with malice," Clay said. "The defendant was a stranger in the community," Clay added, "this was a period of strife between union and non-union miners and the defendant and the prosecuting witnesses were in opposing camps

"From all these facts a jury could conclude that the defendant was motivated by actual malice; that is, he knowingly or in reckless disregard of the truth published these false statements for the purpose of exposing the prosecuting witnesses to public degradation."

Clay added that Ashton agreed to abide by a majority verdict so that his claim that only 10 of 12 jurors voted for conviction won't standup.

"It is our conviction that at least in misdemeanor cases the defendant may waive not only a 12-man jury but an animity of the jurors in reaching their verdict," he said, "provided always that such waiver agreement is entered into understandingly and voluntarily.

One legal source added that the case might be taken eventually to to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Ashton, an Oberlin College Ohio, student said he came to Eastern Kentucky to help impoverished mountain youth.

Eastern Kentucky Miners To Sponsor Labor Day Rally

District 30 of the United Mine Workers of America, will sponsor one of the largest Labor Day rallies in its history at the Old Race Track in Allen, Kentucky, according to Joe Davis, chairman of the committee planning the rally.

Davis reports that International President W. A. 'Tony' Boyle has been invited to address the rally and that other speakers will include District 30 President, C. E. Beane, and Secretary-Treasurer Matt Combs

There will be professional entertainment including country music, clowns and many other acts. Refreshments and sandwiches will be available. There will also be prizes including a 1965 Plymouth that will go to a lucky ticket-holder, and a beauty contest.

District 30's Labor Day rallies have become a tradition in the Eastern Kentucky mountains. Only the mass meeting held annually at Cadillac Square in Detroit, Michigan, has attracted larger crowds. In the middle 1950's District 30's rallie sannually drew gathers of 50,000 to 60,000 persons.

A committee of sixty-two (62), representing all Local Unions in District 30, is currently working together to make this rally one that all local miners and their friends will remember for a long time.

Caudill Asks Court To Stop Strip-Mining

Harry Caudill, Whitesburg author and attorney, has asked the Knott County Circuit Court to stop the strip mining operation that landowners in the Clear Creek section of Knott County say is causing a ruinous washing of a loosened overburden onto their property.

Caudill's aim with the filing for the restraining order is to bar or drastically curtail the operations of the named company.

The motion for a permanent injunction against Kentucky Oak Mining Company was made in a petition in which Caudill also asked the court to dissolve a restraining order against 19 landowners.

Perry Circuit Judge Don Ward named by the State Court of Appeals to hear the case, now will decide whether to dissolve or make permanent the restraining order.

Ward will also rule on whether the mining company, a major supplier for Tennessee Valley Authority, should be stopped from mining coal on the mountain overlooking Hardburly.

Past court decisions have favored the operators on the grounds that broad-form deeds dawn many years ago give rights to recover the minerals without restrictions as to the means of recovery.

Caudill's petition denies that the deed in question, dated October 27, 1905, authorized strip mining.

It charges that the strip mining operation at Hardburly near the head of Clear Creek has loosened hundreds of thousands of tons of dirt and shattered stone, broken trees and caused other spoil and waste.

Heavy rainfall is causing debris to wash in large quantities into Clear Creek and onto the valley land, the petition charges.

If the operation is continued the petition says, "these defendants and all others similarly situated on Clear Creek will lose their entire respective investments."

A large motorcade from Knott, Perry, Letcher and Leslie Counties will leave tomorrow morning for Frankfort and a meeting with Governor Breathitt to ask him for tighter strip mine laws.

Funds For Carrs Fork Reservoir In Proposed Legislation

It was announced today by Congressman Carl D. Perkins that the United States House of Representatives would be taking up this week legislation to appropriate $12,150,000 for the continuation of construction of four major flood control reservoirs in the Eastern Kentucky area.

The measure, in addition, contains $3,693,000 for the construction of the John Flannagan and the North Fork of Pound Reservoirs in the upper reaches of the Big Sandy basin and $24,500 to continue investigation for the development of new reservoirs in the upper Kentucky River basin. These funds are contained in the Public Works Appropriation bill providing funds for the fiscal year beginning this June 30.

Other legislative activity of importance related by Representative Perkins involved House Education and Labor Committee consideration of legislation that he had sponsored to provide disaster assisance to Public School districts in providing funds for operating schools over a five-year period where such schools had been affected by a major disaster declared by the President.

Perkins said that present levels of emergency assistance provided by existing legislation did not go far enough in furnishing schools with the necessary funds to support on-going education programs where school buildings and school operations had been disrupted or impaired as a result of floods and other catastrophes. In addition to providing funds for school operating costs, the legislation would assist local communities in financing new structures to replace school buildings destroyed by flood or other disaster.

The legislation was introduced by Congressman Perkins on May 3. On May 18, the General Subcommittee on Education, of which Perkins is Chairman, initiated hearings. Hearings were concluded on May 26, and last week the Perkins Subcommittee reported the legislation to the Full Committee which would implement Perkins' disaster relief program for local school districts. Perkins said: "I am extremely hopeful that the Full Committee will take this measure up at its regularly scheduled June 24 meeting."

Funds included in the Public Works Appropriation bill to be debated by the House this week, provides $5,500,000 for the Fishtrap Reservoir, $2,625,000 for the John Flannagan Reservoir, $1,058,000 for the North Fork of Pound Reservoir, all in the Big Sandy basin, and $6,950,000 for the Grayson Reservoir, $3,000,000 for the Cave Run Reservoir and $2,200,000 for the Carrs Fork Reservoir. Perkins said that every effort would be made to secure these funds in the finally passed version of the bill. When the measure passes the House, it will then go to the Senate for further action.
